

WHISKY MENU

EXPLORING THE WORLD OF SCOTCH WHISKY

The names of small towns in Scotland are carried round the world mainly due to the Scotch Whisky distilleries they house. If it wasn't for the iconic cluster of white buildings located at Lagavulin on the south coast of Islay and also places like Dufftown (which is considered by some to be the 'Malt Whisky Capital of the World'), Scotland may not have the global fame it has today.

Great single malt whiskies are a combination of places and people. Without them, Scotch whisky as we know it may not exist as it is today. So, it feels right to celebrate not only the liquids but the traditions, people, folklore, myths and legends that make these towns magical.

This menu started as a bridging gap between the two most common ways to layout a whisky menu – regionality and the more contemporary approach of flavour exploration. Regionality is commonly used to categorize Scotch whisky because of general flavour profiles, however even within these regions, there are towns producing liquid that are exceptions to the rules.

With this in mind, we want to celebrate what makes these whisky towns great, and then talk about each whisky on its individual merit. Distilleries in this whisky menu are grouped by the town they are in or are nearest to.

If you're planning your next jaunt around Scotland, and need some inspiration, we would suggest taking your time and enjoying the stories. If you are here for flavour exploration you can skip straight to the flavour pages and find the right whisky for you. Alternatively, speak to any member of our knowledgeable team, and they will happily recommend an incredible Scotch whisky.

Enjoy the Bothy!

'Rome was built on seven hills and Dufftown stands on seven stills'; or so the old rhyme goes. Within Dufftown, the 'main drag' leading towards the historical clock tower was once said to contain an illicit still, right under the nose of the excise men supposed to be finding such sites. Modern Dufftown is still host to six working distilleries and to some, can be considered the Malt Whisky Capital of the World. Not bad for a town with a population of just 1,667. Everyone you talk to whether it be in the shop, pub, ice cream shop or café will have a link to the whisky industry be it auntie, uncle, grandmother or grandfather.

This town was built on whisky and is home to some of the most adored and loved whisky brands around. It's easy to see why its name has travelled around the world.

The next stage of our whisky journey takes us to the former Royal Burgh and capital of Moray, Elgin. Despite being a relative heavyweight in the distillery world, Elgin seems to get slightly less credit for its impressive amount of distilleries than little brother Dufftown. If you put distilleries to one side and consider the other great institutions of this once great Royal Burgh, you have Johnstons of Elgin producing fine wool since 1797 and the mighty Auld Mill Alpaca farm boasting over 80 Alpacas. Beat that Dufftown.

Keith is known as the friendly town but it is also an amalgamation of three smaller towns and the jury is still out on which one is the friendliest. Keith is considered to be the start of the Malt Whisky Trail and as such, leads to it being a very popular destination. You could, if you were on a tour, travel north ten miles and instead discover the quieter town of Buckie. Buckie is a wonderful Scottish coastal town and is mainly known for fishing. The town hosts Inchgower, a distillery that was formed using equipment from Tochineal, a lost Scotch whisky distillery. Inchgower was at one point purchased by Buckie Council making it the only council in Scotland to have ever owned a distillery.

Aberlour is a perfect little Scottish town and everything you could wish for when visiting Scotland for its distilleries. It has great restaurants, excellent pubs, its own whisky shop and some of the best fishing spots in the country. Located right in the centre of Speyside, it is said that there are fifty distilleries within fifty miles. Just down the road is the slightly more 'real' town of Rothes. Here you will find three distilleries as well as a hotel with an incredible whisky bar built by the town's famous coppersmiths. These coppersmiths were the people responsible for maintaining and building a lot of Speyside's cathedrals of copper and used the same techniques and materials to make the bar.

Knockando is rural, situated smack in the middle of Speyside's farming region, this is barley country. For a relatively small town it is pretty well stocked on the distillery front. Not only this but it has a renowned woolen mill which has been producing fine material since the mid eighteenth century. When you are in this area its extremely easy to visualize the historic illicit still trade. Imagine local folk hiding small stills in and around the hills and glens that nurtured the birth of Scotch whisky. At the same time these enterprising distillers would have been running their stills, the Grant family would have been living in Ballindaloch Castle. The castle has been inhabited by the same family for over 450 years, known as the 'Pearl of the North' and even has a couple of distilleries on the grounds.

Port Ellen is one of two ports providing access into arguably the world's most famous whisky island. With nine working distilleries, producing iconic, bold and punchy styles of whisky, they have travelled the world and made the villages of Islay's names appear on famous bars the world over. Take, for example, Lagavulin, a small hamlet located on the craggy and beautiful south coast of Islay producing a smoky and rich single malt. Port Ellen also contains the famous ghost distillery with bottles fetching eye watering amounts of money in auction sites globally. Round the bay from the sleeping distillery are some of the great places to enjoy a dram on the island including the Carraig Fhada and the Singing Sands.

Port Askaig is about as remote as it gets. If it wasn't for the ferry terminal and hotel there probably wouldn't be much going on. Fortunately because of this port there is now a buzz of activity. This is also one of two landing points onto the island as well as the crossing point to get to the even more remote Jura, so if you fancy discovering where Dystopian classic 1984 was written by George Orwell or where the very clever KLF burned one million pounds you would pass through this metropolis. A short journey down the road past the signs for three distilleries and you will arrive at Finlaggan one of the oldest places of parliament in the world and the power seat of the Lord of the Isles, all hail the north.

SKYE

Skye has arguably the most beautiful landscapes in Scotland. On the way onto the island, you pass Eilean Donan, a castle known the world over from its roles in Highlander and The World Is Not Enough. The island itself is a collection of volcanic mountains that look like they have been formed by a prehistoric dinosaur that has run through, tearing bits off mountains and leaving jagged remains. Skye is one of the most visited island in Scotland and it is easy to see why. From the minute you get onto the island to Neist Point, the Islands most westerly point, all the way up to Rubha Hunish in the north, Skye is one jaw dropping vista after another. Located on the shores of Loch Harport is Talisker distillery a must see for any whisky visitor to Scotland. Grab a bottle of 10 year old and take a short walk up the hill to the Oyster Shed. Talisker and Oysters sums this wild island and really brings to life this iconic distillery described by many as “Made By The Sea”

BRORA

SUTHERLAND

This small town in the north packs a punch when it comes to the whisky, industrial and football worlds. Brora's famous exports include coal, boats, salt, cured fish, lemonade and most famously whisky. Brora was the first place in the north of Scotland to have electricity thanks to its wool industry. This distinction gave rise to the local nickname of "Electric City". This same electrical current runs through the mighty Brora Rangers football team who punch way above their league winning numerous Highland league titles and even beating SPL teams from the central belt. Along side all of this Brora is also home to the worlds most famous ghost distillery recently brought back from the dead to make whisky once again. Spooky!

This Highland town located in Aberdeenshire is best known for being the closest village to Balmoral Castle, the summer residence of the various generations of the royal family. The location of the Balmoral estate and the construction of a railway and subsequent station right into the town meant that many people from all over the world visited this small north east town. Including a Czar, various Prime Ministers and even a Beatle (Paul McCartney). Royal Lochnagar distillery is located on the grounds of Balmoral and was given a Royal Warrant in 1848. The grounds are also home to Scotland's answer to the pyramids, in the form of eleven cairns erected by Queen Victoria in memory of Prince Albert.

OBAN

WESTERN HIGHLANDS

Since 1794 the town of Oban has grown up with a distillery proudly located at its heart. This pretty seaside town is best viewed from up top of the Battery Hill amongst the Colosseum esque McCaig's Tower; a solid granite structure commissioned by a rich banker to keep the stone masons of the town employed. On a clear day you can see Kerrera and even Mull. The town is a magnet for the west coast of Scotland's keenest holiday makers who flock to its shores for not only for the world class whisky our American cousins call OH-Ban, but some of Scotland's finest seafood, ice cream and general seaside fun.

The Black Isle is an area of land in northern Scotland surrounded on three sides by bodies of water : The Cromarty, Beauly & Moray Firth. This peninsula is renound for producing some of the best quality barley in the country. Combine that with a huge amount of water and it doesn't take a massive leap to end up at whisky. The most famous distillery in the area is Glen Ord founded in 1838 and one of the only distilleries in Scotland to malt 100% of its own barley. The area has become more famous since the popularization of the 'NC 500' with many people starting here and working their way round the north coast of Scotland to see some of the best scenery in the world.

These towns that couldn't be any more different. The first a bustling little tourist town featuring all a visitor to Scotland could possibly hope to experience from a fish and chip supper to an iconic "see you jimmy hat". The later located just over the Drumochter summit is a barren and remote mountaintop, ironically twinned with Las Vegas. Historically it was used as a meeting point for Highland drovers to sell their cattle, although has had some more famous guests in its time even a royal visit from Queen Victoria who is said to have chastised a dinner she received "No puddings, no fun". Well said QV!

Located south east of Edinburgh, Pentcaitland is often described as being the garden of Scotland. This beautiful, if a little flat, part of the country is no less pretty than the jagged peaks of the west coast and is enveloped with attractive green pastures and hedgerows. The distilleries of the area are graced with incredibly fertile land and wouldn't look out of place in a Tolkien novel.

JOHNNIE WALKER

EST. 1820

Imagine a liquid that embodies all the rich scents, flavours and textures of Scotland, with perfect balance, showcasing the different characteristics of whisky proudly made by the communities mentioned throughout this book and turns them into a blend that is enjoyed the world over.

The maturation of Scotch whisky is still quite a mysterious process. It is like painting a masterpiece when your colour palate is constantly changing. It takes artistry and knowledge to come up with the perfect blend. Crafting Johnnie Walker whisky is a process that is managed by just twelve people.

Led by Master Blender, Dr Jim Beverage OBE, these blenders-come-wizards assess and select whiskies from over 10 million casks, drawn from distilleries dotted across Scotland's four corners, and identify elements that can be matched or contrasted with each other, creating the range of blended Scotch whiskies that make up the Johnnie Walker range. This is not only the world's most popular Scotch whisky but all the best parts of Scotland perfectly married together. In many ways, this is the taste of Scotland in a glass!
